

The Charleston Advocate.

"As ye would that men should do unto you do ye even so to them."

VOL. 2, NO. 49.

The Charleston Advocate,

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY NEWSPAPER, PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY

A. WEBSTER,

OFFICE, 229 MEETING STREET,

(One door North of Cushman.)

All Licensed Preachers of the M. E. Church, whether traveling or local, are our authorized Agents.

For terms of subscription and rates of advertising, see inside.

CHARLESTON, S. C., SATURDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1868.

WHOLE NO. 94.

Heroism.

Is an age of tups and toys,
Wanting wisdom, void of right,
Who shall nerve heroic boys
To hazard all in freedom's fight—
Break sharply off their jolly games,
For sake their country's gay,
And quit proud homes and youthful dames
For female toil, and fray?

Yet on the nimble air benign
Speed nimble messengers;
That warr the breath of grace divine
To hearts in sloth and ease,
So high is grandeur to our dust,
So high is God to man.

When Duty whispers low "Thou must,"
The youth replies, "I can."

—EMERSON'S MAY-DAY.

ANNIVERSARY

or the

CHURCH EXTENSION SOCIETY.

ADDRESS OF BISHOP CLARK.

(Reported by Rev. S. M. Stiles for the Society.)

The Third Anniversary of the Church Extension Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church was held in the Green street M. E. Church, Philadelphia, on Thursday evening, Nov. 19th, Bishop Simpson presiding.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON FINES AND TREASURER.

Dr. Ryett, Corresponding Secretary of the Society, then read his report, which was as follows:

"During the past year we have been fully relieved from the embarrasments under which we had been laboring, adding one of old claims against the Society, and our society is now fully and permanently incorporated into the regular economy of the Church.

With a comparatively small income, we have assisted by donations eighty thousand in twenty-six different States and Territories. We have also greatly relieved and assisted by loan, with little or no interest, eleven more, in eight different States and Territories, some of which we have saved from absolute disaster. We have received contributions to the Monroe Loan Fund to the amount of $1,300, and subscriptions from three brethren to the General Loan Fund to the amount of $39,000.

God in His Providence calls us to an important work, but is opening our way, and encouraging us to hope for the means to do it."

INTERESTING ADDRESSES.

were delivered by Bishop Clark, Dr. Newman, and Bishop Kingsley, but for want of space we can give only the remarks of Bishop Clark, referring more especially to our Southern work.

ADDRESS OF BISHOP CLARK.

* * * Your Secretary expressed a special desire that I should present some of the facts connected with our Southern work. In doing so I must speak somewhat of my own experience; but I believe experience is always in order in Methodist meetings—in order as a part of the sermon, and even the most effective part of the sermon. If the minister has a right item of experience to present, I, therefore, need no apology for running out the line of thought suggested to my mind by this request of the Secretary.

Some four years ago our work in the South—and when I speak of our work in the South, what thoughts it suggests to the mind! The breaking down of that fearful rebellion that had desolated so large a portion of our land; that had laid so many of our promising young men in the grave. The breaking down of that rebellion not only emancipated the four millions of slaves in the South, but it broke down that Chinese wall of separation that prevented us in the years gone by from passing over into that region with the banner of Methodism. Soon after this, our work there was organized into three distinct departments—the Mississippi department, the Middle department, and the Coast department—the Atlantic perhaps it was called. Just four years ago the Middle department was intrusted to myself. The Middle department comprised the whole State of Tennessee, the State of Alabama, and the State of Georgia. At that time—and you must remember it was only four years ago this very month—all the work we had in this region was one preacher stationed in Nashville with a very small society, one laboring among the colored people in Memphis with no organization at all; and thirteen or fourteen laboring in East Tennessee. Most of them were local preachers, and one or two, nearly supernumeraries, were identified with us, and about seven or eight hundred members and fourteen or fifteen preachers. I visited the field, as soon as it was possible, and prepared for the enlargement of the work. The work advanced till, in June, 1865, the Holston Conference, embracing the Eastern part of Tennessee—the part that had been known as the loyal portion of the State—was organized—comprising them something odd preachers, and perhaps about six thousand members. In the January following, or early in December, rather, the work was organized into what was called Mission Districts, extemporized for the efficiency of our work. We soon found it necessary to advance farther South, and, following the line marked out by our triumphant host in their preceding march, I went on to Atlanta and organized, in the January of 1866, the Georgia and Alabama Mission District, that comprised about the same number of ministers we had commenced with in the beginning—about thirteen or fourteen.

The next Fall the Tennessee Conference was regularly organized at McMinnville, and last Fall, in October, 1867, the Georgia Annual Conference, and immediately after it the Alabama Annual Conference, was organized, making four Annual Conferences occupying this territory.

ADDRESS OF BISHOP CLARK.

(Reported by Rev. S. M. Stiles for the Society.)

The Third Anniversary of the Church Extension Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church was held in the Green street M. E. Church, Philadelphia, on Thursday evening, Nov. 19th, Bishop Simpson presiding.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON FINES AND TREASURER.

Dr. Ryett, Corresponding Secretary of the Society, then read his report, which was as follows:

"During the past year we have been fully relieved from the embarrasments under which we had been laboring, adding one of old claims against the Society, and our society is now fully and permanently incorporated into the regular economy of the Church.

With a comparatively small income, we have assisted by donations eighty thousand in twenty-six different States and Territories. We have also greatly relieved and assisted by loan, with little or no interest, eleven more, in eight different States and Territories, some of which we have saved from absolute disaster. We have received contributions to the Monroe Loan Fund to the amount of $1,300, and subscriptions from three brethren to the General Loan Fund to the amount of $39,000.

God in His Providence calls us to an important work, but is opening our way, and encouraging us to hope for the means to do it."

INTERESTING ADDRESSES.

were delivered by Bishop Clark, Dr. Newman, and Bishop Kingsley, but for want of space we can give only the remarks of Bishop Clark, referring more especially to our Southern work.

ADDRESS OF BISHOP CLARK.

* * * Your Secretary expressed a special desire that I should present some of the facts connected with our Southern work. In doing so I must speak somewhat of my own experience; but I believe experience is always in order in Methodist meetings—in order as a part of the sermon, and even the most effective part of the sermon. If the minister has a right item of experience to present, I, therefore, need no apology for running out the line of thought suggested to my mind by this request of the Secretary.

Some four years ago our work in the South, what thoughts it suggests to the mind! The breaking down of that fearful rebellion that had desolated so large a portion of our land; that had laid so many of our promising young men in the grave. The breaking down of that rebellion not only emancipated the four millions of slaves in the South, but it broke down that Chinese wall of separation that prevented us in the years gone by from passing over into that region with the banner of Methodism. Soon after this, our work there was organized into three distinct departments—the Mississippi department, the Middle department, and the Coast department—the Atlantic perhaps it was called. Just four years ago the Middle department was intrusted to myself. The Middle department comprised the whole State of Tennessee, the State of Alabama, and the State of Georgia. At that time—and you must remember it was only four years ago this very month—all the work we had in this region was one preacher stationed in Nashville with a very small society, one laboring among the colored people in Memphis with no organization at all; and thirteen or fourteen laboring in East Tennessee. Most of them were local preachers, and one or two, nearly supernumeraries, were identified with us, and about seven or eight hundred members and fourteen or fifteen preachers. I visited the field, as soon as it was possible, and prepared for the enlargement of the work. The work advanced till, in June, 1865, the Holston Conference, embracing the Eastern part of Tennessee—the part that had been known as the loyal portion of the State—was organized—comprising them something odd preachers, and perhaps about six thousand members. In the January following, or early in December, rather, the work was organized into what was called Mission Districts, extemporized for the efficiency of our work. We soon found it necessary to advance farther South, and, following the line marked out by our triumphant host in their preceding march, I went on to Atlanta and organized, in the January of 1866, the Georgia and Alabama Mission District, that comprised about the same number of ministers we had commenced with in the beginning—about thirteen or fourteen.

In the midst of the threatenings of the Ku Klux Klan and their visitations, God has been at work. Some of you may remember that one of our preachers was shot in that region. He was a colored preacher, and one of the most excellent men of color that we ever had among us—of wide influence, great purity of character, known and honored, not only by the colored people but white, but also by the white people who would come out in throngs to hear him preach. Shortly after his appointment, when he was returning home, he was met by a one-armed ex-rebel soldier, who took deliberate aim, without saying a word, and shot him. He held on to his horse a little while, turned toward his home, and arrived so near that his wife met him. Helped him from his horse, and in short time he died. This vile murderer in open day, without disguise of any kind, shooting down a minister of Jesus Christ! Why, you say the perpetrator was arrested, do you bring to trial; executed! Nothing like it. The one-armed friend lives to-day, and is applauded for that deed of murder!

With regard to our work there we were alarmed at that time. We supposed the work among the colored people must end with the death of this noble man. But God looks out for his own work. The most glorious revivals in West Tennessee break out in that very church and spread until nearly five hundred souls were converted to God. This is to my mind an indication that God is in this work.

Our preachers suffer some in that region of terror. One incident may be to the point, showing what kind of men we have in that work. One man, a genuine Irishman, whose heart in the work was aroused one night between twelve and one o'clock, by a knock at his door. He called out, "Who's there?" "A friend," was the response; and then he heard several persons outside. "Well," said he, "my friends are all decent men; they are not out at this time of night!" "Open your door!" "I will not do it." "If you don't we'll break it down and come in!" "Well," said he, "then somebody will get hurt, and if anybody is hurt, I don't intend to let them all the time," said "a little way, held a consultation, came back to the door, and warned him to leave within ten days, or they would come back and string him up to a tree." Said he, "If you come back you will find me here. I'm going to stay here, and don't intend to be the only one here if you return!" He had been sent from town afterwards up to the time of Conference, but has gone on steadily with his work.

From the Tennessee, I passed to the Holston Conference, which met at Chattanooga. There I found the Conference had organized in 1865, grown up to a membership of twenty-five thousand nine hundred and fourteen, including probationers and local preachers, as in the other case; and there was an increase the season of two thousand one hundred and ninety-four. I am happy to say that, in the change of public feeling that was evidently coming about in the region, all the churches in Chattanooga were opened to the members of the Conference, except the Episcopal, and that was not open at all; and our preachers occupied these churches much to the acceptance of the people, as far as I know, and greatly to the increase of our cause.

In Georgia, from which State you have heard from in more ways than one, I found that our work there had been wonderfully prospered, so that the membership had gone from ten thousand six hundred and seventy-five to fifteen thousand one hundred and ninety-one, a net increase of four thousand five hundred and twelve; and in this Conference we have seventy-five preachers and stations.

From thence I passed to the Alabama Conference, taking the steamer at Rome, Georgia, and passing down the Coosa river to Gadsden and out among the mountains where the Conference met in a country place. Even in Alabama—though some of our preachers were unable to get to Conference, some for want of means others because of the perils that surrounded them, and one of them being in prison charged with setting fire to a dwelling—one who would be about as likely to do such a thing as myself—we found that God had been with us in that work, and the Conference showed an increase of three thousand and fifteen, giving us a membership of eleven thousand six hundred and nine.

Now, I wish to sum up the aggregate of this work for these four Conferences. I am not able to speak of the other Conferences. Some five others have been organized in the South; for you must know we have spread a network of Conferences and Presiding Elders' Districts all over the South. I say I am not able to give a summary for those other Conferences. Dr. Newman may, perhaps, supply some data. But in these four Conferences there are now sixty-two thousand two hundred and twenty-nine members. And a feature of the work, to my mind exceedingly interesting, is that eleven thousand six hundred and eighty-five of these are probationers. You ask me, "Have we not gathered all these from the church South?" This simple fact that eleven thousand six hundred and eighty-five probationers have been added to the church, indicates how great and wide-spread, and glorious have been the revivals of religion in that region. A large portion of the people desolated by the war, banished, stripped of all property, have turned with a sorrowing heart to the great Heater of the sorrows of the soul!

In that region also, we number four hundred and thirty-eight churches, with a value of two hundred and seventy-nine thousand dollars. We have also five hundred and sixty-seven Sunday Schools organized, and three thousand five hundred and twenty-three officers and teachers. What an army of workers co-operating with the ministry there! And we have three hundred and forty-five appointments made this last October, in these four Annual Conferences.

Such has been the growth of the work in the region that I particularly represent, and about which I was requested to speak. You will ask, "Are not all these colored people? Are they not all negroes?" Well, suppose they are; they are men for whom Christ died, and who have been redeemed by the shedding of his most precious blood; and they are men too, if that were the case, in whom there is hope in relation to the future. The colored people, to a very large extent, as all reasonable, right-minded men now admit, are more steady in their work, more conscientious in their dealings, than any one expected them to be before their emancipation; and there is that deep feeling, that earnest desire to know, on the part of parents and children—but especially on the part of parents for their children—that is full of promise, indicating that this class will, in time to come, have not only political consideration, but also influence and position in society.

But you ask again the question, "Are these not all colored people?" I have carefully gone over the Minutes, and find in these four Conferences, about forty-six thousand and some hundreds are white. The balance, some sixteen thousand, are colored. That I partly attribute to the fact that they are more easily led into the ministry, than any one returned from that work with a stronger conviction that it was of God. I never returned with a stronger conviction in my own mind that it was now firmly established and destined to abide through all time than I did this very Fall. It is compact and organized; and what is more valuable than a life, the feeling is begotten in the minds of our preachers that we are there to occupy and耕耘 over all that land. And they still further, the conviction exists not only in the minds of the preachers, but in the minds of the community generally. Even rebels are coming to feel, at the old Methodist Church, is there to stay.

The Alabama Conference met in a country place in the Free Valley—a rich, fertile valley. The church was unadorned because the society could not buy glass, nails, etc. On Friday morning a large number of persons came in from the country round about, in their large wagons, and camped as Methodists were accustomed to do forty or fifty years ago at camp meetings. On Saturday a larger number came, and on Sunday the whole country for twenty miles about came in. The camp there was said to be the largest assembly of any kind that ever came together in that valley, and I am sure that many carried away the impression that the old church had really returned in her life once since it, so that the heads roll off, they may sparkle water over it as you pass, yet it can never be made again what it was when he dew fell silently upon it far heaven! On a frosty morning, you may see the pines of glass covered with ice, and the flowers that hang in the morning dew, impaled with dew, arrayed as no deadly woman ever was arrayed with jewels—since since it, so that the beads roll off, they may sparkle water over it as you pass, yet it can never be made again what it was when he dew fell silently upon it far heaven! On a frosty morning, you may see the pines of glass covered with ice, and the flowers that hang in the morning dew, impaled with dew, arrayed as no deadly woman ever was arrayed with jewels—since since it, so that the beads roll off, they may sparkle water over it as you pass, yet it can never be made again what it was when he dew fell silently upon it far heaven! On a frosty morning, you may see the pines of glass covered with ice, and the flowers that hang in the morning dew, impaled with dew, arrayed as no deadly woman ever was arrayed with jewels—since since it, so that the beads roll off, they may sparkle water over it as you pass, yet it can never be made again what it was when he dew fell silently upon it far heaven! On a frosty morning, you may see the pines of glass covered with ice, and the flowers that hang in the morning dew, impaled with dew, arrayed as no deadly woman ever was arrayed with jewels—since since it, so that the beads roll off, they may sparkle water over it as you pass, yet it can never be made again what it was when he dew fell silently upon it far heaven! On a frosty morning, you may see the pines of glass covered with ice, and the flowers that hang in the morning dew, impaled with dew, arrayed as no deadly woman ever was arrayed with jewels—since since it, so that the beads roll off, they may sparkle water over it as you pass, yet it can never be made again what it was when he dew fell silently upon it far heaven! On a frosty morning, you may see the pines of glass covered with ice, and the flowers that hang in the morning dew, impaled with dew, arrayed as no deadly woman ever was arrayed with jewels—since since it, so that the beads roll off, they may sparkle water over it as you pass, yet it can never be made again what it was when he dew fell silently upon it far heaven! On a frosty morning, you may see the pines of glass covered with ice, and the flowers that hang in the morning dew, impaled with dew, arrayed as no deadly woman ever was arrayed with jewels—since since it, so that the beads roll off, they may sparkle water over it as you pass, yet it can never be made again what it was when he dew fell silently upon it far heaven! On a frosty morning, you may see the pines of glass covered with ice, and the flowers that hang in the morning dew, impaled with dew, arrayed as no deadly woman ever was arrayed with jewels—since since it, so that the beads roll off, they may sparkle water over it as you pass, yet it can never be made again what it was when he dew fell silently upon it far heaven! On a frosty morning, you may see the pines of glass covered with ice, and the flowers that hang in the morning dew, impaled with dew, arrayed as no deadly woman ever was arrayed with jewels—since since it, so that the beads roll off, they may sparkle water over it as you pass, yet it can never be made again what it was when he dew fell silently upon it far heaven! On a frosty morning, you may see the pines of glass covered with ice, and the flowers that hang in the morning dew, impaled with dew, arrayed as no deadly woman ever was arrayed with jewels—since since it, so that the beads roll off, they may sparkle water over it as you pass, yet it can never be made again what it was when he dew fell silently upon it far heaven! On a frosty morning, you may see the pines of glass covered with ice, and the flowers that hang in the morning dew, impaled with dew, arrayed as no deadly woman ever was arrayed with jewels—since since it, so that the beads roll off, they may sparkle water over it as you pass, yet it can never be made again what it was when he dew fell silently upon it far heaven! On a frosty morning, you may see the pines of glass covered with ice, and the flowers that hang in the morning dew, impaled with dew, arrayed as no deadly woman ever was arrayed with jewels—since since it, so that the beads roll off, they may sparkle water over it as you pass, yet it can never be made again what it was when he dew fell silently upon it far heaven! On a frosty morning, you may see the pines of glass covered with ice, and the flowers that hang in the morning dew, impaled with dew, arrayed as no deadly woman ever was arrayed with jewels—since since it, so that the beads roll off, they may sparkle water over it as you pass, yet it can never be made again what it was when he dew fell silently upon it far heaven! On a frosty morning, you may see the pines of glass covered with ice, and the flowers that hang in the morning dew, impaled with dew, arrayed as no deadly woman ever was arrayed with jewels—since since it, so that the beads roll off, they may sparkle water over it as you pass, yet it can never be made again what it was when he dew fell silently upon it far heaven! On a frosty morning, you may see the pines of glass covered with ice, and the flowers that hang in the morning dew, impaled with dew, arrayed as no deadly woman ever was arrayed with jewels—since since it, so that the beads roll off, they may sparkle water over it as you pass, yet it can never be made again what it was when he dew fell silently upon it far heaven! On a frosty morning, you may see the pines of glass covered with ice, and the flowers that hang in the morning dew, impaled with dew, arrayed as no deadly woman ever was arrayed with jewels—since since it, so that the beads roll off, they may sparkle water over it as you pass, yet it can never be made again what it was when he dew fell silently upon it far heaven! On a frosty morning, you may see the pines of glass covered with ice, and the flowers that hang in the morning dew, impaled with dew, arrayed as no deadly woman ever was arrayed with jewels—since since it, so that the beads roll off, they may sparkle water over it as you pass, yet it can never be made again what it was when he dew fell silently upon it far heaven! On a frosty morning, you may see the pines of glass covered with ice, and the flowers that hang in the morning dew, impaled with dew, arrayed as no deadly woman ever was arrayed with jewels—since since it, so that the beads roll off, they may sparkle water over it as you pass, yet it can never be made again what it was when he dew fell silently upon it far heaven! On a frosty morning, you may see the pines of glass covered with ice, and the flowers that hang in the morning dew, impaled with dew, arrayed as no deadly woman ever was arrayed with jewels—since since it, so that the beads roll off, they may sparkle water over it as you pass, yet it can never be made again what it was when he dew fell silently upon it far heaven! On a frosty morning, you may see the pines of glass covered with ice, and the flowers that hang in the morning dew, impaled with dew, arrayed as no deadly woman ever was arrayed with jewels—since since it, so that the beads roll off, they may sparkle water over it as you pass, yet it can never be made again what it was when he dew fell silently upon it far heaven! On a frosty morning, you may see the pines of glass covered with ice, and the flowers that hang in the morning dew, impaled with dew, arrayed as no deadly woman ever was arrayed with jewels—since since it, so that the beads roll off, they may sparkle water over it as you pass, yet